Introduction

In 2020, Congress did a lot more posting on social media and a lot less legislating.

Overall, Congress posted on social media 784,614 times across Twitter, Facebook, Instagram in YouTube, compared to 715,124 times in 2019. Meanwhile, of the 5,117 bills Congress introduced in 2020, only 28 were enacted. Comparatively, 169 of the 8,364 bills introduced in 2019 eventually were signed by the President.

While the volume of legislation was low, its impact was significant and Twitter replaced floor debates in 2020. Memes and designed graphics replaced the classic floor posters you spot on CSPAN.

Despite negotiations only lasting a few days, Congress used #caresact 2901 times in 2020. The #heroesact never saw light in the Senate, but the hashtag was still used 4,767 times. While leadership debated legislation behind closed doors, social media provided a window to what the rest of Congress was looking for.

Methodology

Using Quorum Federal, this report analyzes nearly 800,000 posts made by members of the 116th Congress on official Twitter, Facebook, Instagram, and YouTube accounts in 2020. The report covers activity from January 1, 2020 to November 30, 2020. For measuring the messages legislators wrote in their own words, Twitter data does not include retweets. Instagram and Facebook data does not include stories. The analysis in the report was made possible with Quorum’s comprehensive social media monitoring and reporting tools.

Legislative numbers for bills enacted is based on the cohort of the year it was introduced. So, while 109 bills were officially enacted in 2020, our measurement of 28 is based on the cohort of 5,117 bills introduced in 2020. Both the 28 bills in the 2020 cohort and the 214 bills enacted by the 116th Congress are the lowest in decades.

For Congress on social media in 2020, it was all about the written word. While Twitter and Facebook increased over 2019 numbers, Instagram and YouTube both saw declines. These mainly-visual platforms may have decreased due to COVID-19—there were no site visits, office photo ops with visitors, or trips around legislators’ districts to photograph and video from mid-March onward.

Social vs. Bills

Congress was increasingly active overall on social media in 2020, but did much less legislating than usual. In 2019, Congress tweeted 50 times for every one bill that was introduced and 2,489 times per one bill enacted. In 2020, that balance shifted dramatically: Congress tweeted 98 times per bill introduced and 17,912 times per bill enacted.

FOR EVERY ONE BILL INTRODUCED

- Twitter: 98 times
- Facebook: 60 times

“You can always assume that the tweeting about legislation is accompanied by legislating.”

“They today, I’m announcing my new bill to create a COVID-19 Racial and Ethnic Disparities Task Force. We need a serious, targeted effort to address the reality that Black and brown people are disproportionately being infected and dying from COVID-19 across the nation.”

“While many questions remain about the new coronavirus in China, reports that it could spread underscore the need to be fully prepared. I’ve asked @SecAzar what steps HHS is taking to ensure we’re ready should this outbreak escalate or another global health threat emerge.”

What topics dominated Congress’ conversation on social media this year? You guessed it. COVID, COVID, COVID. #covid19 was the top hashtag of 2020 by a longshot with 48,541 posts using the tag. The second most popular hashtag? #coronavirus with 14,726. In total, 12.6% of all tweets from Congress in 2020 referenced #covid19 or #coronavirus. And that percentage would increase even more if you included COVID initiatives like the Paycheck Protection Program, vaccine and testing efforts, and the occasional post about legislators’ hobbies during quarantine (remember Sen. Warner’s tuna melt?).

Aside from COVID, Congress’ other legislative conversations revolved around #2020census and #justiceinpolicing.

The Senate’s social media volume is fairly distributed across the chamber, with 27 unique Senators appearing on at least one top 10 list across Twitter, Facebook, Instagram, and YouTube.

Three senators found themselves on three of the four top ten lists — Sens. Cruz (R-TX), Markey (D-MA), and Ernst (R-IA). Despite the rapid confirmation process of Supreme Court Justice Amy Coney Barrett, Cruz managed to tweet 214 times this year mentioning #scotus. When not tweeting about COVID-19, Markey discussed the Green New Deal and net neutrality on social media. For Ernst, her #99countytour drove up her social numbers as she visited constituents across Iowa.

"Instagram offers us the opportunity to provide a unique, behind-the-scenes look at how Senator Boozman performs his duties...Since many constituents will never travel to Washington, D.C. or attend events with him in Arkansas, our regular updates with creative content share glimpses into aspects of the senator’s role, as well as his personality and background, that most people would otherwise never get to see. It’s also a fun way to exhibit charming scenes from around the nation’s capital and the Natural State — always a sure bet to please our audience, especially with the platform’s predominantly younger users."

The most active members on social media platforms from the House show you don’t have to be a headlining name in order to use your owned media to get your message out there. High-profile house members like Nancy Pelosi, Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez, Kevin McCarthy, and Dan Crenshaw don’t crack the top ten on any platform. Meanwhile, rank-and-file members like Chip Roy, Elise Stefanik, French Hill, and Buddy Carter lead the pack across Twitter, Facebook, Instagram, and YouTube, respectively.

Roy and Carter both held their respective titles atop the Twitter and YouTube lists in 2019. Roy directly mentioned @realdonaldtrump in 365 tweets, while he also tweeted over 140 times about @Super70sSports. Carter’s YouTube videos range from appearances on Fox News to reactions to policy proposals in Congress to reading children’s books at local schools in his district.

In what can only be described as a chaotic 2020 for the executive branch, President Trump’s tweet volume increased 46 percent compared to the same time period last year. Unlike Congress which saw its largest spike in tweets in March during the initial outbreak of COVID-19 in the United States, March was only President Trump’s sixth-most active month on Twitter. Instead, he peaked in September and October as the election neared. There was then a sharp decline in November with the first month with under 1000 tweets since August 2019. With 14,314 tweets in 2020, President Trump averaged nearly 43 tweets per day, or 1.78 per hour. Five out of ten of Trump’s most mentioned accounts are related to Fox News or Breitbart.

The COVID Conversation Continues Online

COVID-19 appeared in Congress’ social media on January 17th with Sen. Feinstein’s call on HHS Secretary Alex Azar to begin preparing for an outbreak. Almost a year later, the dialogue on the pandemic isn’t slowing down. Conversations that started with relief packages and testing strategies is transitioning to vaccines...and more relief packages. Check out our auto-updating, interactive dashboard on COVID-19 dialogue from December 1st onward.
